AGRICULTURAL.

Every farmer of any experience knows that cotton deteriorates in value daily after the boll is open sufficiently to yield readily to the picker's fingers. Much has been said by uninformed writers about the losses which annually result to the cotton growers of the South from careless handling, including bad storage, poor ginning, reasons. baling, etc., but we are satisfied that the surest loss, the greatest aggregate dam-age, is that which results from undue ex-were produced. Care of a Milk Cow. The utmost care should be exercised to keep the teats in a good, sound condition, says a writer. Many a good young cow has been turned into a kicking cow by milking her when her teats were sore. We cannot expect a cow will stand quietly while she is being burt in the process of milking. The object in farming successfully is to more than secure a recompense for the labor bestowed, whether such labor be applied on a single acre or on a large field.
